Publicize now or wait until later?

Having been a newspaper reporter for numerous years, I was (am) well aware of the value timeliness has on news.

Editors may have been consistent in pounding one thing at reporters.

“It’s news on the next publication date, not the day after.”

Before I started Lagging4s, the email magazine of table shuffleboard, I heard two complaints about the shuffleboard publication already in place.

“It isn’t about us,” and “our results don’t get published soon enough.”

I thought I could fix that by publishing once a week, via email, and printing all the results and as many stories that came through the door.

More than 600 shuffleboard players and promoters subscribe via email which means they have accepted the concept of almost instant publication for more than a year. The majority of that number have asked to receive Lagging4s.

This last weekend I found out the promoters of one tournament didn’t want their results published in Lagging4s until after they appeared in another location (website).

Thus the results had been withheld for a period of time even though everyone who played or was there knew who won or lost.

Another tournament director submitted their results as soon as possible and the event received a big splash in Lagging4s a couple of days after the tournament was over.

I wonder which was most effective for tavern owners, tournament sponsors and players?

Tournament results and stories about shuffleboard published in a “specialty” publication are going to show our sport in a positive manner. People competed, some lost, some won. They had fun and were for the most part happy. Ever see an unhappy person holding a trophy or an envelope with cash in the a shuffleboard picture? Not likely.

What’s the message here?

Simple. You can have your tournament results in Lagging4s whenever you want. When you send them to me, or I contact you and you report them, I’m going to do at least a write-up with a numerical listing of the winners.

To my way of thinking this will continue to help shuffleboard grow and flourish, which should be all of our goal.
