New faces finding 'ezine' in email

A fair number of you might be wondering where the heck this "Lagging4s" PDF that's suddenly in your email came from or how I got your email address in the first place.

First of all. If you don't want to receive Lagging4s, send a reply to the email that brought it and you won't get another until you ask for it.

However, if you've never seen Lagging4s before, I hope you'll read this issue all the way through and see what it offers before deciding you don't want it.

Lagging4s started in May of this year. Originally, I planned to send out an issue a month. It only took a week before I decided that publishing weekly would give the table shuffleboard world access to information that is more important than a monthly publication warrants.

Lagging4s is free to people with email and it will always remain free. I've promised myself I won't do a print publication because of the cost (and the work) involved. If I never have to fold and staple another piece of paper in my life, that would suit me just fine.

One thing I ask email readers to do is print out copies for their friends without computers or to hang on the wall of their favorite shuffleboard place. The more people who see the information the better.

I do sell advertising in Lagging4s and the rates are usually on Page 3 or 4, but the future of the "ezine" isn't predicated on advertising sales. Twenty-five percent of any advertising sales will be put back into table shuffleboard tournaments in the form of added money. Right now the added money for 2005 is a little less than $100. Sometime in the next couple of months, I'll put out a notice asking owners of shuffleboard establishments if they want whatever's in the pot to add to one of their tournaments. In the end, I'll pick a name out of a hat and that place will get the money. It'll be at least $150.

Lagging4s and "Pacific Coast Shuffleboard News" collaborate in sharing information about table shuffleboard on the West Coast. "Pacific Coast Shuffleboard news is a quarterly-publication on slick paper. If you haven't seen it, you should.

Lagging4s does need something from its readers.

Information.

On what?

Here's some ideas:

Pre-tournament stories (when, where, all that stuff).

Tournament results (who won, who didn't. Tidbits of info to make the story more interesting. Pictures).

League news.

Fun shoots you're planning to have, or that you had.

Outside activities that shuffleboard players enjoy together.

New products.

New (or old) places to play that are already listed in "Home Boards" that usually starts on Page 5.

Notes about players who might be having health problems, or who have recently recovered.

Marriages.

Lagging4s fueled by information

From Page 1

Humor.

Letters to the editor. (Any subject, no name calling).

Your own column. (No, you wouldn't have to write it weekly, but you could).

Fiction about the game.

Your feelings about the game. (It has great emotional highs . . . and lows)

Personality stories. (Who's the most interesting player in your area?)

So far, Lagging4s has featured Billy Mays in a personality profile by a Texas author; printed a story by a college student's on his perspective of a Friday night meat shoot; and let me write a piece of fiction about playing on the road.

Note: If you want any of the articles from previous Lagging4s, let me know, I'll send them out right away.

On a personal note. I'm from Washington state and have been playing for a while. I discovered shuffleboard on my 21st birthday. I'd have found the game sooner if I was willing to sneak into the right taverns.

Some people say I'm controversial. True.

Yes, I am critical of the current rating system because it's subjective. And even though I disagree with the people who operate the system (Ron and Debbie Bowers) about whether a player has to be rated, I'd pay money to help their effort if the ratings were performance-based. They do a hellva job in getting the ratings together.

I don't mind stirring the pot, but I'll print the other side of any point I try to make. If you don't agree with me, let's debate. Or you just have your say and I'll shut-up. Dialogue is good for our game.

So now you know. Information spins the wheels of Lagging4s. I hope you'll contribute to the energy.

Lastly, I hope that people who are seeing Lagging4s enjoy the product and will be looking anxiously for next week's issue. By the way, the publication date is Wednesday.

Lorraine needs help

California's Lorraine Olson is recruiting people to write testimonials about John McDermott that will be included in the booklet commemorating his induction into the Table Shuffleboard National Hall of Fame. The induction takes place on Friday, Nov. 5 during the North American Shuffleboard Championships.

McDermott's company, The Shuffleboard Federation, sponsors the tournament. McDermott is one of the top players in the country in addition to being one of the game's most ardent supporters.

Time is of the essence for Lorraine. She needs your thoughts about John no later than October 15 but the sooner you get them to her the better as she'll have no more than a month to compose, layout and print the honor to John. Send your words, and pictures if you have them, to her at Lorraine.Olson@vta.org.
